"Goldendoodle"

"Hello, sister. What are you doing at the edge of the wood?"

"What are you? And where are your friends?"

"Most are at Catelyn's house. Some are in the woods." She looks Ghost-flower up and down.

"What are you wearing? It's so... colorful. And sister, what have you done to your hair?"

"I changed it. To make them like me."

"That's ridiculous. You can change your clothes and hair if you want but doing it just so some foolish people who don't understand who you are and what you are like is just silly. You hate wearing bright colors."

True.

"So don't, alright?"

Goldenrod stood up, hugged her sister, and promptly sat down again. Ghost-Flower smiled, wrapped her arms around herself and walked home. Once there, she changed back into her old clothes and fixed her hair back to its usual appearance.

She felt better and more like herself than she had the last few days. Goldenrod was right. She didn't need to change for anyone.
